In a videotaped deposition for E. Jean Carroll's civil lawsuit against him, Donald Trump misidentified a photo of Carroll as his ex-wife, Marla Maples. This misidentification undermined his central defense that Carroll could not have been assaulted because she was "not my type". BBC +2

The sequence of events and subsequent developments include:

- The "Not My Type" Defense: When Carroll initially accused Trump in 2019 of sexually assaulting her in a Bergdorf Goodman dressing room in the 1990s, Trump repeatedly denied knowing her and publicly declared "This woman is not my type". CNBC +3
- Deposition Mistake: During his October 2022 deposition, Trump was shown a black-and-white photo of himself, his first wife Ivana, Carroll, and her then-husband John Johnson. Pointing at Carroll, Trump stated, "It's Marla," referring to Marla Maples. Trump was corrected by his attorney, Alina Habba, who stated, "No, that's Carroll". - Impact on the Trial: Carroll's legal team used the deposition exchange in E. Jean Carroll v. Donald J. Trump to publicly release footage, arguing the confusion contradicted Trump's claims that Carroll was unappealing to him. Facebook · POLITICO +3
- Video Coverage: The deposition footage generated significant news coverage. You can read reports on the exchange from news outlets like CBS News or BBC News, as well as watch video breakdowns on platforms such as The Guardian.
