How do I set the chronos password in developer mode?

I've enabled developer mode, but now I can't use sudo commands because I don't know the "chronos" user password. Is there another place where that password is set?

Nope you enabled more than developer mode, you pressed that button that enables ssh and root access to your chromebook, do the following:

ctrl + alt + ->

login as root (root if it asks for password)

now type the following: chromeos-setdevpasswd it will ask for a password, type the one you want now you can use chronos and use the password you set.

Ask for a password but can't type anything in the password area. All that works is enter which then leads to a incorrect login. After that keys work but password doesn't work still and all keys that aren't letter break.

This is because on linux cli instead of putting little stars to hide password it just puts nothing you are still typing it's just not showing

This did not work for me

Does not work for me. Trying to install linux and I get an nonexec error. so I am working on other option. Nothing seems to work. This password is one of many issues.

In that terminal (ctrl alt -->), i found it does work to change your password. I had to play with it a long long time though. After which, i ended up in that terminal a few more times, trying to change my password a few more times. I found that it gives you three chances, and as long as i continued typing the same password all three times it would work.
