Recovery Won't Let Me Use Recovery Email

I know the username. I know the password. I have a recovery email address. I have the computer with which I have logged in before. The only thing that I don't have access to is the phone number I used 7 years ago. I did NOT have 2fa set up. But the recovery process will not let me past the phone number verification. I get an email on the recovery account that says Google blocked the login attempt. Which was me logging in with the correct password.

Without BOTH a current recovery email AND a current phone number, previously set up in the account, (both must be accessible and up to date), then the account usually can't be recovered.

If you still wish to attempt account recovery, come back and let us know.

I don't need to recover it per se. I know the password. Why won't Google let me into my own account? I did not set up 2fa to link with my phone way back when.

You know the password, but you can't sign in?

If that is the case, then you need to recover the account, there is no other way.

I know the password. It's my account from 7 years ago. When I select "I don't have this phone" it asks me for the last password I remember (which is the correct one) then it says it cannot identify me.

The major problem appears to be that you don't have a recovery 'phone number.

To recover access to a free Google account, or a Google Workspace Individual ($$) account, you will need to try account recovery ("AR"), which is the only way accepted by Google.

First, read <https://gmailaccountrecovery.blogspot.com>; which covers many problems you might encounter, and has useful hints.

- Google do not send a password reset link on demand. Check your browser password manager, or a password app, otherwise you need to continue with AR; select "Forgot my Password".
- Without BOTH a current recovery email AND a current phone number, previously set up in the account, (both must be accessible and up to date), then the account usually can't be recovered. (Other conditions may also apply. Click here and go to "Let's be realistic".)
- Can't answer a question or use the nominated device, etc? Click on "Try another way" (or similar).
- ID does not prove that the account is yours. Google will not ask "security questions" about account details, your contents at Google are encrypted, and are generally inaccessible, therefore nothing can be checked.
- Recovery page is at <https://accounts.google.com/signin/v2/recoveryidentifier?flowName=GlifWebSignIn&flowEntry=ServiceLogin>. Only you can do this, we can't assist. Don't use a VPN, and, if possible, use the same device, connection method, and location, which recently worked.

If you fail, wait seven days (168 hours) without any attempts, then try again. If you still can't recover, then Google won't be able to return the account.

Unfortunately Google don't provide any live support, nor a manual review; and starting a new post will not make any difference to the result. Please don't do that.
