

Set up recovery options

Important:

- Not all recovery options are available for all regions, accounts, or devices.
- If you use an account through your work, school, or other groups, these steps may not work. Ask your administrator for help.

To make sure you can get back into your Google Account if you ever can't sign in, add recovery information.

How recovery info helps you

Recovery info helps you get back in to your account if:

- You forget your password
- Someone else uses your account
- You're locked out of your account for another reason

You can't add recovery info while you're locked out of your account or in the account recovery process.

Tip: If you change your recovery info or other authentication factors, Google may send codes to your previous info for 7 days. If someone starts to use your account without your permission, this allows you to quickly secure your account.

Add or change a recovery phone number

When you add or change your recovery phone number, it may take up to 7 days for those changes to take effect. If someone tries to use your account without your permission, this allows you to quickly secure your account.

If you have a trusted passkey or security key, you may be able to speed up the process for Google to trust your new recovery phone number. Learn how to speed up this process.

Tip: Do not use a Google Voice number as a recovery phone number. If you do, you could lock yourself out of your account. For example, if you can't sign in to your Google Account, you might need a verification code to get back in. But, because it's sent to your Google Voice, you can't get the code.
