◆ AI Overview

There are no public records or celebrity announcements of famous women specifically tracking or disclosing their menstrual cycles on Juneteenth.

However, many prominent Black women—including Kerry Washington, Tracee Ellis Ross, and Issa Rae—have actively celebrated and highlighted the holiday. Additionally, many celebrities have been very candid about their periods and menstrual health in general, such as Miley Cyrus, Amy Schumer, and Jennifer Lawrence. 🔗

To see exactly which women have been the most vocal about menstruation, you can read The Cut's 25 Famous Women on Periods breakdown featured on Madame Gandhi's Blog. 🔗

If you meant to ask about Black-owned feminine care brands or initiatives that launched on or align with Juneteenth, I can provide a list of organizations to support. Let me know if that is what you are looking for.
